The Honorable Linda McMahon
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20202

RE: Notice of Proposed Rulemaking on "Reimagining and Improving Student Education"

Dear Secretary McMahon:

We, the undersigned audiologists, audiology students, and other interested parties, submit this comment in response to the U.S. Department of Education's Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, which is proposing definitional changes to 34 CFR § 685.102. We respectfully request that the Department include the Doctor of Audiology (AuD) degree within the definition of "professional degree" in the final rule.

As demonstrated below, the AuD degree unequivocally meets all three criteria set forth in the proposed rule and warrants inclusion among programs eligible for professional student loan limits under the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program.

AuD Degree Meets All Three Criteria for Professional Degree Designation

1. The Degree Is Required for Entry Into Professional Practice

The AuD degree signifies completion of academic requirements necessary for entry into practice as an audiologist. It is required to begin practice as an audiologist and is a mandatory prerequisite established by accreditation standards and state licensing boards. Furthermore, every state requires an advanced degree in order to obtain a license to practice audiology. This is directly analogous to how physicians need an MD or DO or how pharmacists need a PharmD.

2. The Degree Requires Advanced Professional Preparation Beyond the Bachelor Level

Audiology requires professional skills far beyond those attainable through a bachelor's degree. The complex diagnostic, therapeutic, and clinical decision-making skills required in audiology cannot be acquired through undergraduate education alone.

Audiologists master sophisticated clinical competencies, including:

- Electrophysiological testing that requires expert neurophysiological interpretation to evaluate auditory pathway integrity;
- Comprehensive vestibular assessment, including videonystagmography and rotary chair testing, to identify underlying causes of balance disorders;
- Cochlear implant candidacy determination and programming; and
- Hearing aid fittings with real ear measurements and outcome validation.

These advanced skills demand three to four years of full-time post-baccalaureate study and a minimum of 12 months of supervised clinical practicum.

3. The Profession Requires State Licensure

Audiology is a licensed health profession in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Before practitioners can engage in independent practice, licensure requires:

- Graduation from an accredited program;
- Successful completion of the rigorous national examination in audiology; and
- Ongoing continuing education.

These requirements directly mirror those of other enumerated professional degrees such as medicine.

Federal Program Impact and Return on Investment

In addition to satisfying the proposed regulatory criteria, audiologists deliver critical health care services that generate substantial savings for federal programs.

Early Hearing Detection and Intervention (EHDI) programs, administered through the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, depend on audiologists for diagnostic evaluation and follow-up services. Early identification and intervention reduces special education costs for children with hearing loss. These programs coordinate with vital early intervention services administered through the U.S. Department of Education, under Part C of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA).

The National Institutes of Health-funded ACHIEVE randomized trial demonstrated that audiologic interventions reduced cognitive decline by 48% over three years among at-risk older adults. Dementia-related costs are estimated at up to $781 billion annually. By mitigating cognitive decline associated with untreated hearing loss, audiology services address a major driver of federal health expenditures.^{1,2}

Within the Department of Veterans Affairs, hearing loss and tinnitus (e.g., ringing in the ears) remain the two most common service-connected disabilities. Audiology services directly lower disability-related compensation and health care utilization for millions of veterans.

For the more than 6,000 infants born annually in the United States with permanent hearing loss, timely audiologic intervention—such as cochlear implants—reduces the need for extensive special education services, saving hundreds of thousands of dollars per child.³

Workforce demand further underscores the profession's national importance. The Bureau of Labor Statistics projects 10% growth in audiology positions through 2032, reflecting increasing need for these highly trained clinicians.⁴ At the same time, approximately 15% of Americans experience some degree of hearing loss, reinforcing the sustained and growing demand for audiologic services nationwide.

Our Request to the Department

For the reasons shared above, we strongly urge the Department to include the Doctor of Audiology (AuD) within the definition of “professional degree” in the final rule revising 34 CFR § 685.102. This profession aligns closely with nine of the 11 enumerated professional degrees that are health care professions, providing high-acuity medical care across the lifespan.

Audiology demonstrably satisfies all requirements of the operative definition: it is mandatory for entry into licensed practice, requires advanced clinical skills substantially beyond bachelor's degree programs, and necessitates professional licensure in all jurisdictions.

Audiology delivers measurable value to federal health and education systems while providing essential diagnostic and rehabilitative services across the lifespan. From infants requiring early identification of hearing loss and cochlear implantation when indicated to adults with vestibular disorders (e.g., balance disorders), tinnitus, and age-related hearing impairment, audiologists provide specialized, medically complex care that improves functional outcomes and reduces downstream costs.

We appreciate the opportunity to provide this comment and look forward to the Department's consideration.
