The Honorable Linda McMahon
U.S. Department of Education
400 Maryland Avenue, SW
Washington, DC 20202

RE: Notice of Proposed Rulemaking on "Reimagining and Improving Student Education"

Dear Secretary McMahon:

We, the undersigned speech-language pathologists (SLPs), speech-language pathology students, and other interested parties, submit this comment in response to the U.S. Department of Education's Notice of Proposed Rulemaking, which is proposing definitional changes to 34 CFR § 685.102. We respectfully request that the Department include the master's degree in speech-language pathology within the definition of "professional degree" in the final rule.

As demonstrated below, the master's degree in speech-language pathology unequivocally meets each of the three criteria set forth in the proposed rule and warrants inclusion among programs eligible for professional student loan limits under the William D. Ford Federal Direct Loan Program.

Master's Degree in Speech-Language Pathology Meets All Three Criteria for Professional Degree Designation

1. The Degree Is Required for Entry Into Professional Practice

The master's degree in speech-language pathology signifies completion of academic requirements necessary for entry into licensed practice. All 50 states and the District of Columbia require this graduate degree from an accredited program as a condition of licensure. Individuals with only a bachelor's degree are not eligible for independent licensure to practice speech-language pathology.

The Department's proposed illustrative list includes two master's level theology degrees (MDiv and MHL), confirming all professional degrees are not limited to doctoral programs.

2. The Degree Requires Advanced Professional Preparation Beyond the Bachelor Level

Speech-language pathology requires professional skills far beyond those attainable through a bachelor's degree. SLPs must master sophisticated clinical competencies such as comprehensive assessment of speech, language, cognition, voice, fluency, and swallowing; differential diagnosis of complex communication disorders requiring integration of linguistic, neurological, and developmental knowledge; dysphagia assessment, including instrumental procedures such as videofluoroscopic swallow studies; voice assessment, including laryngeal evaluation; and augmentative and alternative communication system design. These advanced skills demand a minimum of two years of full-time post-baccalaureate study and at least 400 supervised clinical clock hours.

3. The Profession Requires State Licensure

Speech-language pathology is a licensed health profession in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. Licensure requires:

- Graduation from an accredited program;
- Successful completion of the rigorous national examination in speech-language pathology; and
- Ongoing continuing education.

This universal licensure framework satisfies the proposed regulatory criterion concerning professional regulation.

Federal Program Impact and Return on Investment

In addition to meeting the criteria shared above, SLPs deliver critical health and educational services that generate substantial savings across federal programs in clinical and education settings. For example, among the 2.5 million people who sustain brain injuries each year, adults who receive cognitive rehabilitation from SLPs are twice as likely to be employed one-year post-injury and 45% less likely to live in a skilled nursing facility.

SLPs are key contributors to the care of medically complex patients, delivering services that improve outcomes while reducing downstream health care utilization. In head and neck cancer care, speech-language pathology counseling and treatment are associated with a two-to-three-day reduction in hospital length of stay, a 34% reduction in feeding tube placement (with patients approximately three times less likely to require one), and a 98% lower risk of feeding tube dependence three to six months post-treatment.^{1,2,3} These outcomes reflect both improved patient recovery and substantial cost avoidance, underscoring the return on investment of integrating speech-language pathology services into complex medical care pathways.

Within the Department of Veterans Affairs, SLPs provide essential rehabilitation services for veterans with traumatic brain injuries and neurological conditions, facilitating transition from high-cost inpatient care settings to community-based care.

For pediatric populations, speech-language pathology interventions addressing feeding and swallowing disorders reduce the total length of stay in hospital settings and are associated with an average cost savings of $40,000 to $365,000 per child.

Our Request to the Department

For the reasons described above, we strongly urge the Department to include the master's degree in speech-language pathology within the definition of "professional degree” in the final rule revising 34 CFR § 685.102. The profession aligns closely with nine of the 11 other health care fields already recognized as professional degrees and delivers demonstrable public and fiscal benefit across federal systems.

Recognizing speech-language pathology as a professional degree will ensure consistent regulatory treatment of a licensed health profession that provides essential services across the lifespan—from medically fragile infants requiring feeding and swallowing intervention to adults with stroke, neurodegenerative disease, and complex rehabilitation needs related to Alzheimer’s and Parkinson’s.

We appreciate the opportunity to provide this comment and look forward to the Department’s consideration.
